CHRYSANTHEMUM CULTURE

SOIL

Any type of soil is good for Chrysanthemums, if the soil in which they are planted will grow other plants it will grow them. After plants have been planted they should not be fertilized until a good top growth has been started and roots have a good growth. Any good commercial fertilizer which contains nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium will bring the best results.

WATER

When plants are set in the ground they should be watered enough so as to soak the ground at least to a depth of eight inches. Chrysanthemums require a lot of water, and if not kept moist at all times, will soon show signs of wilting. In the late summer when plants have a heavy growth they should be irrigated, not watered from the top as blight will soon affect them.

LOCATION

Chrysanthemums like sunlight and should be planted where shade will not be on them a major part of the day. A sheltered location is best, where rain, wind and frost will not hit them directly. The plants should be set apart according to the variety and type. If the plant has large leaves or small and according to the height it will grow. The average distance should be between twelve to fifteen inches.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS MAY SAFELY BE PLANTED FROM MAY 1 to JULY 20.

CHRYSANTHEMUM TYPES

ANEMONE	This type has cushioned center with a single row of florets around, appears as a single. There are three types: large intermediate, and miniature.
DECORATIVE	Medium in size of flower, not as large as the typical "football mums" but still showing many of the same characteristics. This is the most used in the garden varieties.
POMPON	This type is small in flower but very abundant in bloom and color. Florets may be flat or round ball shape. The button types are in this same group with small thumb like flowers, with many on a stem.
QUILLED	This type has petals with narrow, pointed tubers, that look much the same as some dahlia varieties. This type can be disbudded to one flower per stem.
SINGLES	This type has usually flat petals with a light cushion center, with one or two rows of florets. This type can be disbudded, with the result of large flowers.
SPIDER	This type is one of the most interesting groups, with flowers of large size. Florets are thread like in appearance, with graceful pastel colors. This type should be disbudded to one flower per stem.
INCURVED	Large "football mums" with florets curving in to give the massed effect. Many can be grown in pots to be protected before frost will blight them.
